Description

from #9287:

There is only one final issue which is valid for all disabled fields. Is it possible to generally make disabled fields copyable? Currently they only show the text but it is not possble to copy it. At some places this is already implemented. We probably should move this issue to a new ticket.

Copy from #9287:

AM:

For toggleable they still set the dirty flag (tested on Person details view with bulk editor). This is unwanted.

I do not yet fully understand why it is not possible to use the same technique as for ordinary text fields in toggleable fields.

KL:

The same technique is used for text fields and toggleable text fields but maybe I need to have a look on the event handling of the toggleable text field.

The toggleable text field has additional modifyListener and keyListener, maybe this is the cause of the different behaviour.

Now an unprotected toggleable field can be edited. I tested with unprotected collector title of a team. But same result for e.g. name cache.

I have to reopen this as now the Username and Group.name fields are editable again, but shouldn't. See also #8277.

Changing the username must not be possible. What is the reason why these fields are now editable again? Is it possible that there are other fields influenced in the same way that are now editable but they shouldn't? If yes, this is critical and needs to be fixed as soon as possible.

Fixed it for the Userdetails but the group name never was disabled. I can do this as well, but maybe this is a little bit more difficult because it should be editable as long as it is not used anywhere?

Yes, for groupnames it is not so obvious. But both fields are marked as unique so the easiest way to guarantee this is to make the field not editable.
On the other hand a groupname should have a semantic meaning so sometimes an admin may want to change the name to a better one.
So, yes, probably we should leave it editable. It is not a serious issue anyway.

I will check the username implementation and close the ticket then.

For usernames it works as expected.
