Description
... probably this means that the TaxEditor should be forced to forget the password.
The problem is, that unchecking the "remember me" flag has no effect.

Now there is a workaround available:

when deselect the "remember me" button, the login information is deleted from preferences.

Seems to work, but I can't find the place where the credentials are actually stored when "remember login data" is checked. I wanted to check if this is save or a preliminary implementation. (not really part of this ticket but when working on this we should also check that everything is really secure now).

Do you know were the data is stored?

The login informations are stored in eu.etaxonomy.taxeditor.store.prefs and they are deleted when remember login data is not checked.

The storing location should be implemented differently. Therefore I reopen the ticket.
