Target version:	Release 5.25
Severity:	normal
Description
Currently one has to first push the +-button and then the search button but the search button is the only button to push after the +-button that makes really sense and therefore can be automatically pushed. Only in rare cases one may immediately want to delete the newly created record again but for this you can cancel search and the push the delete button.

This is not as easy as it seems because the framework of these collection details views bases on creating a dummy element first. I will have a look whether this can be changed quickly for teams.

My idea was not to not to create the "dummy" element but to automatically click the search button after it. So the only thing that needs to be implemented is that not the user but the software clicks the button after creating the dummy element.

Yes I know, but this is not as straight forward as it looks like because I need to adapt the framework a bit. Only to adapt the newElement() Method results in opening the selection dialog twice.
